Employment for At-Risk Populations

Wednesday, November 30, 2011

9:00 a.m. – 12 noon

Registration begins at 8:30 am

In today's economic climate many companies are hiring people who are not only capable of meeting the job description but employers are also looking for generalists who can use their transferable skills to enhance the position they are hired into. With countless millions out of work, the market has become very competitive. In the past many companies would hire a person based upon personality match... but those days are far behind us. Employers are looking for the person who can "do it all."

Employment for at Risk Populations need not be a difficult task. So many workforce professionals try to fit people into the job instead of finding jobs that people have a natural affinity to be successful in. It's a one case at a time approach based upon the gifts, talents and abilities as a foundation. This workshop helps you make a positive contribution to the over all bottom line of any company while virtually eliminating the old stigmas, and attitudes associated with job finding. You will be challenged to learn how to solve problems for business owners, which will lead to employment or business development opportunities.

Program Facilitator: Dwayne Ross is a Vocational Director for a Maryland based Day Habilitation Center and has over 18 years of human service experience including coaching employment specialists, case managers, job coaches, transition specialists, at risk populations and individuals with multiple barriers to employment. He is the author of the book "No More Crumbs from the Table". Dwayne is a NACO award winner for creating an advance Title I program, "Youth 2 Work" which assisted hundreds of inner city youth with and without disabilities find meaningful employment options.
